A twentieth century front porch extends across the entire house and is open along the main block and chosed-in along the addition. The compostion tiled roof is of a medium pitch with internal end brick chimneys. The entire house was stuccoed in the early part of this century; however the brick underneath the porch is exposed in a couple of areas and English bond is evident.

The main(south) facade is composed of three bays on each floor with a door floors (originally there was a door occupying the central bay of the first, and second (which is presently a window) the central bay of the second floor also.): floors. A The foundation is of uncoursed fieldstone. Above the foundation is an English bond watertable with basement two basement window openings, They retain their heavy mortise and tenen timbers and diamond grass sectioned vertical bar wooden bars. There are visible segmental varehes, above the opening on the southis not visible west corner. The bond for the rest of the structure had not pessibly be Flemish, with glazed headers. The window sash is 6 ever 6 and the trim is a plain haff round. The main door has three herizental panels (new glazed) above two vertical partially raised panels below the lock rail. A transon is located above the door with its muntins narrow and deep. The door durround is there are widely fluted on the horizontal and vertical members and square blocks are found in the corners. The door also has a paneled jamb. All the door and window meldings date from a later period possibly be from the period around 1825-1840. CONTINUE ON SEPARATE SHEET IF NECESSARY

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Veasey-Ford Mouse has had a long and scretimes tumultous history. The point was originally part of St. John's Maner first patented to John Pate of Virginia by Cecil Calvert in 1664. In 1675 Captain John Kerr became the owner, who in turn sold the land to George Oldfield in 1683. At that time the point was called Welch's Point. George Oldfield was a confident of the notorious George Talbot, who after murdering Christopher Rousby, was supposed to have hidden on the property in 1684. Sometime around 1700 Olffield moved to Pennsylvania for in 1703 a legal document concerning horses states his residence as being in Chester County, Pennsylvaina. (Land Records Liber 2/359) The property was conveyed from Ephraim Herman to James Veasey in 1716 and then by will to William Veasey in 1753 (Land Records Liber 2/381) William Veasey married Mary Gordon and in 1768 beath they built themselves a home on the property. Betwenn 1777 and 1787 the occupancy of the house is unclear but in 1787 John Ford bought the property from Veasey. (Land Records Liber 16/180)

Captain John Rord married Millicent Hyland in 1770. (Vestry p. 334) John was 18 years old and Millicent was 16. The Miller History of Cecil County states that Captain Ford settled across the river from Ford's Landing at Oldfields Point. (Miller p. 41)

In August of 1777 the British fleet began to disembark treeps at the ferry landing nearby. This marked the beginning of the campaign to capture Philadelphia.

The eave possesses a plain boxed cornice which dates from this century.

The east facade is without fenestration excluding the small attic ventilator which used to be window. A match window on the other side of the brick chimney stack has been closed up. A drip course is found on the gable end and it probably once protected a pent cave. The outstanding detail remaining on the east facade is the slate datestone with the initials we have and the date 1768. A tree of life symbol issues out of the V and continues up into the arched top. The initials stand for William and Mary Veasey who probably build the house in 1768.

The north facade is identical to the south facade, except for the second floor central bay which is a window that is located lower than the other two windows to light; the stairway. The centrally located first floor door has an arched transon, which has been closed up, and a six-panel door with two panels now glazed. The lot slopes westward on the north side, and exposery the northwest basement window.

The story and a half brick addition is located on the west gable end and has seen radical change. The structure rests on a fieldstone foundation and the walls are roughly laid common bondwith headers about every eighth course. The wing floor was probably considerably lower, at or near grade, and traces of a steeper roof west wall of the appear in the stucce of the main block's west wall. This would have allowed a second floor in the wing. Presently the first floor is raised to meet the same level as the first floor of the main block. The roof to the wing has a medium pitch and is sheathed with a compostion tile. An interior end brick chimney is located in the west gable. Entrance may be gained through either of two doors located about and window opposite each other in the castern bay of the north and south walls. The trim to the doors and six-ofer six sash as plain.

The gable end of the main block possesses an identical drip course and a modern cement block stove stack. The gable end windows flanking the chimney stack have both been covered up.

Internally a central hall extends through the house on both storys and is flanked on both sides by two rooms, typical of all center hall Georgian plans.

An open dog-leg stair rises, with an intermidiate landing to the second floor and an stair there, enclosed, to the attic floor in the north end of the hall. The lower flight of each stair to the first landing is quite steep, the risers and treads being almost equal. Rron the landing to the next floor the tread dimensions are dramatically greater than the riser dimensions. Another oddity to his hall is the pressence of a drop of two steps when exiting through the north door. The cellar stair entrance and northed door are located on this landing. The cellar door retains its wrought HL hinges with leather washers and six-panel door.

The main stair has a slim molded hand rail supported by a slightly tapered newel and plain rectangular balusters.

The reems eff the hall centain a let of early woodwork which probably dates from the construction of the house in 1768. The main palor is the (southwest room) at present and has the most elaborate corner fireplace. The mantel has Federal lines without the fine details. There is a molded architrage around the fireplace opening which supports a frieze with plain projecting pilasters and a wider central block. Above the frieze the bed and shelf molding break out at each intersection with the projecting pilasters and central block. Molded chair rail and early architrages on some doors remain. The entrance between the southwest and northwest palors was expanded. The fireplace in the northwest from has been removed but a support in the cellar still exists to prove its earlier pressence. Paneled window reveals were probably added in the 1325-1840 period. The other two rooms on the first floor retain their mantels, six-panel doors and door architraves. Each fireplace has an architrave around the opening, a plain frieze, bed molding, and a molded shelf. A simple chair rail coes remain in the northeast but room and not in the southeast.

The sedend story plan is identical to the first except for a small foom at the head of the stair, which is presently a bathroom. The closed up door is located in this room and consists of the single pane above and the jib door below. A beg board is found on the interior east walk. Three rooms on the second floor retain their early mantels. They differ slightly from the mantels in the lower two rooms in that they have a narrower frieze and slightly different bed molding and mantel shelf. The door architraves differ a little but are basically the same.

The attic is unfinished and has revealed much about the alterations to the structure. The roof was probably rebuilt about 1825-1840, along with the rest of the renevations. The rafters are not continuous plate to ridge; the lower rafters span only from the main walls to the collar beams. Newer rafters continue from the collar beams to the peak. Additions to the brick gable ends and outlines from the inner face of the chimney indicate that the roof was of a slightly shallower pitch.

A twentieth century watercolor depicts the house with the dormers on the south slope of the roof and a double porch on the south facade, all of which had disappeared.

In the uncoursed fieldstone sellar the straight sawn first floor framing remains intact. Much of the first floor pine flooring remains under a later hardwood covering. A stone wall extends across the cellar from east to west, and dividers the cellar in two rectangular rooms. Diagonal chimney supports are located in each interior corner of the cellar.

Finishes in the west wing, the present kitchin, are simple and of the twentieth century. A wide chimney breast suggests a former fireplace in west end. A closet north of the chimney probably replaces a stair or ladder to the left room which is now inaccessible. Beneath the present floor there is a deep crawl space that shows the base of a cooking fireplace and the remains of a brick floor. The original support over the fireplace opening is found by looking about knee level in the present closet.

The front porch does extend, across the entire south facade of the structure and seems to be a later replacement of an earlier mineteenth century porch. The beam above the porch columns appears to be older than most visible elements of the porch. Backless benches are built against the south wall of the house and extending from the south door to the east and west ends of the open porch; Their serolled ends support a plank seat. A depression in the stucco just below the second floor line suggests an earlier form of the porch. The section of the porch extending across the wing has been screened in and dates from a much later period.

Admin

There is a barn on the property which undoubtedly dates from the mid to late mineteenth century, and undoubtedly built for an earlier time when the property was an active form. It is a typical barn plan with a central thrishing floor and side aisles for livestock, There are shed additions on the east and west sides for storage. A small outhouse type building is located just east of the main house and is presently used for storage.

General George Washington viewed the proceedings from a hearby hilltop and sent the following report to Brigader General John Armstrong, "the Enemy began to land this moring about six miles below Head of Elk Opposite the Cecil Court House." (Fitzpatrick, p. 130) On the British side, Captain Montresser stated that, "the van of the fleet came to anchor at one half past nine in the morning and in half an hour had made good their landing." (Johnston, p. 217) The British squadron numbered 256 vessels carrying approximately 17,000 English and Hessian soldiers.

After the troops had landed they made camp in the fields surrounding the ferry and the road leading to Head of Elk. In Johnston's history a copy of Major Andre's map gives the location of troops and of local homes. (Johnston, p. 218) General Knyphausen, according to Andre's map set up his headquapters in the Ford House. On August 27th General Howe marched up the river road to Head of Elk after his army had had some decent rations. Due to the lack of adequate food while on board ship the men were very difficult to control and a certain amount of pillaging occurred. Major Andre said, "The soldiers slaughtered a great deal of cattle clandedtinely," (Johnston, p. 332)

At the time of the British invasion of Cecil County John Ford was serving as a member of the local militia. Ford was commissioned a captain in this group on April 21, 1778.

The Tax Commissioner Report of 1783 reveals that the British raided, looted, and partially burnt Captain Ford's house, (Miller, p. 44) Ford requested renumeration due to the damages suffered him by the British.

Captain Ford was an active mesident of the county after the end of the war until his death in 1824. Although his tax assessments reveal that he as concerned with secular matters, his main achievements revolved around the Protestant faith of Methodism. In 1788 Bishop Asbury, the first Methodist bishop in America, visited

Ford and held a meeting for worship at his residence. (Clark, p. 40) A new Methodist church was formed in North East in 1794 and Ford was one of the original trustees. In Bishop Asbury's journal he describes the winter kitchen of Captain John Ford's by saying, "it was a large brick floored room, with a fireplace eight feet across with a stone bench on each side, there was a long swinging crane. In the jamb of the chimney is an eyster even of a half cylinder shape three feet deep, two feet wide with a door." This quote follows with the remains of the winter kitchen at the present and only further architectural investigation will prove its early appearance.

Along with the historical significance the building is rich in architectural importance. The datestone in the gable end is architecturally important because it firmly dates the remaining eighteenth century weedwork in the house. The probable Flemish bond brick with segmental arches over the windows, the pent eaves along the gable ends and the second floor door tie this building in closely with building patterns in northern Cecil County and Pennsylvania. The Veasey-Ford House is one of a very few early houses remaining in the Oldfield Point area and it remains as a credit to its particular building traditions.

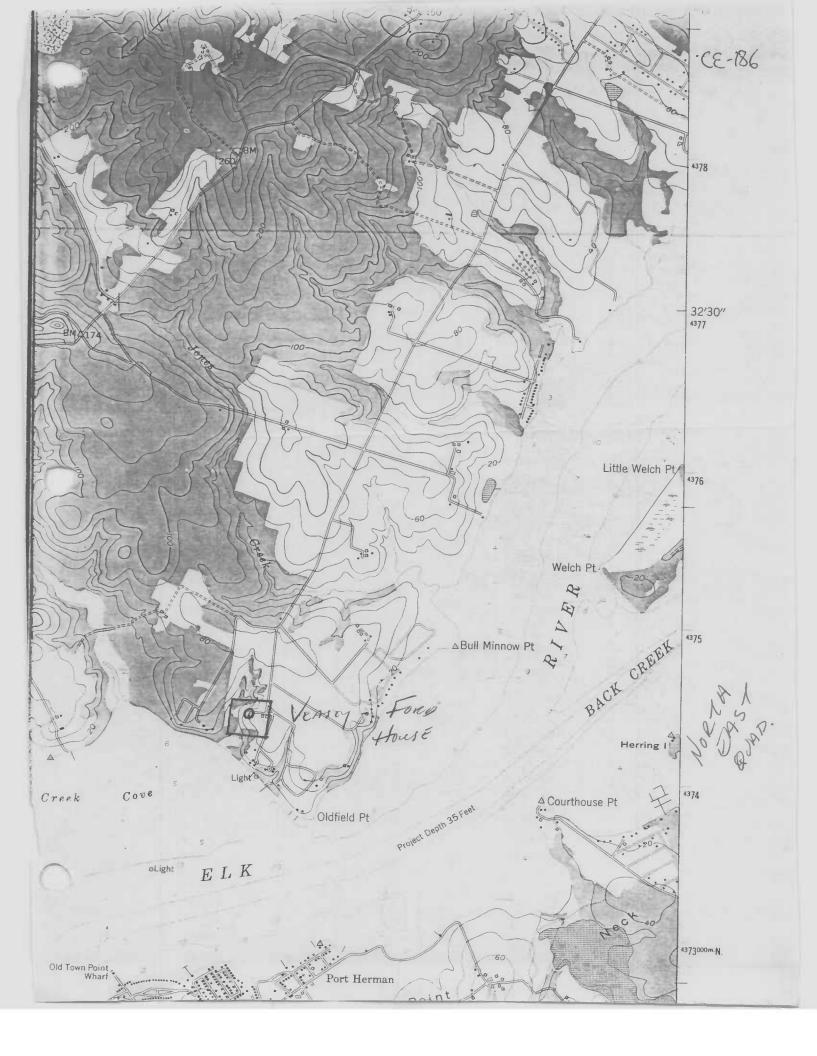

The fourteen acres that accompany the nomination is the amount of land the present owners possess. If it were possible the whole point should be mominated because of its association with the landing and encampment of the British.
